Abstract

The present chapter includes 152 species under 137 genera, 39 subfamilies, 16 families, and 09 superfamilies from the Great Nicobar Biosphere Reserve. 106 species are new records for the moth fauna of Great Nicobar. For all of the included species, first reference, material examined, distribution in India and elsewhere (outside of India), and remarks, wherever required, are given. A checklist of 245 species reported from Great Nicobar is provided.

Introduction

Moths, the lepidopteran insects, are generally regarded as the poor representative of their diurnal relatives, i.e., the butterflies. Commonly they are considered as the furry, velvety, mysterious insects of the night. For the differentiation of moths and butterflies, there is no single character, which can reliably separate the moths from the butterflies. However, both groups can broadly be distinguished on the two important attributes, i.e., the clubs at the antennal tips in butterflies, a character absent in moths, and probably a better distinguishing character is the lack of frenulum in butterflies, as a wing coupling apparatus, which is present in most of the moths. Moths can be best defined as the non-papilionoid lepidopterans and are extremely diverse. About 90% of the total lepidopterans are moths, with 41 superfamilies and 129 families distributed worldwide. Globally, moths are known to have about 160,000 species, with about 13,500 species from India. As far as the fauna of Great Nicobar is concerned, the moths are known by 139 species (Chandra et al. 2018; Singh et al. 2021a, b, c, d)

The present manuscript deals with 152 species under 137 genera, 39 subfamilies, 16 families, and 09 superfamilies from the Great Nicobar Biosphere Reserve. 106 species are new records for the moth fauna of Nicobar. For all the included species, first reference, material examined, distribution in India and elsewhere (outside of India), and remarks, wherever required, are given. A checklist of 240 species reported from Nicobar is provided.

Diversity

Out of the known 139 species, 46 species could be collected and studied in the present work (marked with ), whereas 93 species could not be studied (in the checklist marked with *). In the present paper, 106 species were reported as new records for the moth fauna of Nicobar. Out of the 106 newly reported species, 24 species known to be distributed in North eastern states of India and hence, their distribution is extended from North eastern states to the Nicobar Island. Eight species are known to be widely distributed in mainland India, and their distributional range is extended up to the Nicobar Island. Of the other five species for which the distributional range extension is reported, two were reported to be distributed only from North India, the other two were reported from the Gangetic plains of West Bengal, and one species was reported to be known from South India only. Interestingly, four species are reported to be widely distributed in South East Asia, and the Andaman and Nicobar Islands are their westernmost distributional limit, i.e., they are not reported from mainland India. All of the other species are reported to be widely distributed, ranging from India to the Oriental, Pantropical, Indo-Australia, and Indo-Pacific regions.

Endemism

Of the 152 species studied, 14 species/subspecies are reported to be restrictedly distributed in Andaman and Nicobar Islands, of which nine are distributed only in Nicobar.
