

FELLOWSHIPS AVAILABLE, USA

University of Michigan: The Department of Population Planning and International Health has scholarships available for qualified Master's and PhD degree students for the fall term 1986. The program, located in the School of Public Health, was established to meet the demand for well-trained professionals in the population and health fields, and provides graduate courses and programs of study for individuals wishing to work in these areas, either in the U.S. or abroad. The program is particularly interested in attracting students with experience in population and family planning. For more information and an application, write to: Admissions Secretary, Department of Population Planning and International Health, School of Public Health, Ann Arbor, MI 48109; (313) 764-7516. The University of Michigan is an affirmative action/equal opportunity institution.

INTERNSHIPS AVAILABLE

Population Service Internship Program: The University of Michigan is offering a new internship program for graduates of population or population-related programs. The program, funded by USAID, is designed to identify and place interns who can assist developing countries with various aspects of their population/family planning work. Through this new program, developing countries will be provided with assistance from professionals who have recently completed advanced population studies in such areas as the administration and management of population and family planning programs, evaluation, and information, education and communication. The main purpose of this program will be to offer developing countries the knowledge and skills of recent graduates. A second purpose will be to provide a valuable work experience for Americans who are likely to seek careers in international population assistance. Each internship will be for two years in Third World ministries of health, family planning agencies, or other institutions and universities involved in population planning. Some opportunities will also be available for mid-career applicants. For more information and/or applications, write to: Director, Population Service Internship Program, School of Public Health, The University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI 48109; (313) 764-7516. The University of Michigan is an affirmative action/equal opportunity institution.
